Units for this set EU Directives 2009/90/EU and 2013/33/EU Harmful Algal Blooms HAB are phenomena where large numbers of phytoplankton cells, either single or in small colonies, living in the euphotic zone, undergo accelerated growth and produce compounds (eg toxins) that inhibit the metabolism of other organisms. The organic crust floating on the sea bed, which detritivores feed on, thus becomes toxic. The compounds produced can also end up in the bodies of higher trophic level organisms. Research has shown that there is a strong link between climate change and development of HAB, with the frequency and magnitude of HAB events increasing and the spread of the phenomena affecting coastal ecosystems. A few weeks ago in our Ask The Math Doctors episode, we covered a common misconception about COVID-19: How do you know whether it's a virus or a bacterium? What you see here is medical student Frederick Bok. He was going to school in Karolinska Institute in Sweden when this happened. Initially the internet said it was a virus. Then it said it was a virus and a bacterium. But here's the thing: The "virus" part is incorrect. You can see for yourself that this was bacteria. Because it's not a virus. Viruses are microscopic, and are made of proteins and nucleic acids. And also, these cells are only a few microns long. That said, COVID-19 can be dangerous. But it's extremely rare. The CDC estimates that 1 in 750,000 people will get the coronavirus and the vast majority of them will recover. Still, it's something to be aware of. If your concern is for your own health, keep in mind that there are a lot of tips and strategies on how to prevent getting sick if you're already exposed. People have reported getting sick in either a few days or a week of getting exposed, which means if you know you've been exposed, you really only have one week to get sick. You can read more about that here. Science writer Ani Phyzoa interviewed Frederick to get his thoughts on why this misunderstanding happened. You can listen to that clip on the audio player below. ### What's New in the?

Thursday, September 28, 2013 1st class / Cross Country / Track So, the first question I have to ask is why do I go to class and do the work, or volunteer at the Cross Country course today? The short answer to that question is because this is being paid work, so I can't get out of it. Go to class and do work will be the mantra of my everyday life. I took with me a highlighter, a dry erase pen, a pen, regular paper, a digital camera, my water bottle, my sweater, my jacket, my hat, black pants, an umbrella, a thermometer, hand sanitizer, and my bike. I'm sitting in the grass at the start of a warm-up track race in San Francisco, running on a treadmill. I have to report back for an ambulance ride if I feel pain in my knee. Since it is "paid" work, I feel lucky to be able to ask for an ambulance ride. If I was doing it on my own dime (I don't have money at the moment...). My legs would be screaming for mercy since these are supposed to be the straightest of all the track events. My husband and I have been given the choice of whether to eat lunch together or to eat it at our respective meet-ups. If you know anything about us, that is a big deal. Re: Something I did today: Go to class and do work: Less talking, more doing. I spent the morning working on a new collection of blog posts about various topics. I know this might be foreign to you, as much of this has happened in other forms of expression. But I have two goals for each post. First, I need to be able to pick them up and read them to someone, or to just read them myself. Second, I need to write them so that they do all of these things. For example: I've been thinking about the story we tell ourselves in order to tell our stories. The ones that do so when we are not the ones we tell it to. And how that affects the story we tell ourselves while there is someone else who is telling the story. As a theme, I've been thinking about confessions. The rituals that we go through to tell ourselves truths about ourselves. Sometimes I feel like I am repeating a story that is already familiar to me. That I tell myself and
